Hood Thomas Architects is a full-service firm founded by John Hood and Mark Thomas in 1997. For the last two decades, HTA has delivered progressive, innovative and artistic designs that bring to balance its client's vision and the unique design process each project entails. With a focus on residential properties, HTA's design typology spans from modern to more traditional styles that hold to value the relationships of light, space, material, sustainability and the natural environment.

LEFT: Form meets function: The new benchmark for sustainability and environmental stewardship in architectural design is met with passive house construction and net-zero living standards that HTA has advanced in three San Francisco residential projects. Function was key when designing this passive house, taking into consideration factors that maximize energy efficiency.

ABOVE: This staircase provides a sculptured and light-filled focal point in San Francisco's first net-zero home built to rigorous passive house standards.
